

Washington's Oral Anticancer Treatment Access Law: What Clinicians Need to Know

Outdated coverage policies in Washington USED TO limit cancer patients' access to life-saving drugs!

Traditionally, IV chemotherapy treatments are covered under a health plan's medical benefit where the patient is required to pay an office visit copay, usually between $20 and $30. Conversely, oral anticancer medications are covered under a health plan's prescription benefit and, many times, patients are responsible for extremely high and unmanageable copays, creating an enormous barrier for patients to access orally administered drugs. According to a recent study published in the Journal of Oncology Practice and American Journal of Managed Care, 10% of cancer patients failed to fill their initial prescriptions for oral anticancer medications due to high out-of-pocket costs.

Legislative Solution

In an effort to remove barriers to accessing life-saving treatments for cancer patients, Washington implemented legislation, effective January 1, 2012, that directs individual and group health plans covering cancer chemotherapy treatment to extend coverage for self-administered anticancer medication at a cost at least comparable to chemotherapy medications administered by a health care provider. To view Washington's oral parity law, please see next page.

What Does This Mean for Patients?

If a patient is privately insured (the law does not apply to Medicare), and their plan covers chemotherapy, an FDA-approved, orally administered drug should be covered at least comparable rate for the patient as an intravenously administered drug.
